U.S. SOUTH TIMBER MARKET OUTLOOK

The US economy improved in the first quarter of 2013, with GDP growth coming in at 1.8 percent (compared to 0.4 percent growth in fourth quarter of 2012).

The most recent manufacturing and service sector reports issued by the Institute for Supply Management indicate that both the paper and wood products industries expanded in June, and service-related industries—real estate, construction and forestry—all reported growth in business activity in June.

Forest2Market's forecast indicates that housing starts will stay between 950,000 and 1 million starts annually for 2013 and 2014 and that GDP growth will range between 1.75 and 2.25 percent during the same period.

Because of delayed harvests during the recession, supply of sawtimber is abundant. As a result, we do not foresee significant increases in sawtimber prices, though they will still be vulnerable to spike on extreme weather events, temporarily overwhelming generally tepid, albeit improving, economic fundamentals. Delayed pine sawtimber harvests will also put some upward pressure on pine pulpwood pricing, especially in areas with pulp & paper, OSB and pellet manufacturers are operating.

Because hardwood pulpwood is a byproduct of pine sawtimber harvests, the increase in these harvests (as housing continues to recover) will increase supply and keep hardwood pulpwood prices from moving to a higher level.
